

Animal Technician

Quince Therapeutics, Inc. (Nasdaq: QNCX), is a biopharmaceutical company advancing innovative precision therapeutics targeting debilitating and rare diseases.

Position Purpose

This position will be in our West Lafayette, Indiana location. The Animal Technician will be responsible for performing in vivo preclinical studies as well as responsible for collecting preclinical data. In this role you will be responsible for animal husbandry, disease model creation, aseptic surgery and dose administration and other tasks to analyze phenotypic response of various therapeutics in vivo. This role will report to the Senior Scientist, Bone Biology

Responsibilities

- Monitor animal behavior
- Ensure the wellbeing of test animals
- Change cages and provide food and water to lab animals
- Animal husbandry
- Record detailed information about each animal's weight, size, diet, and behavior
- Maintain database records
- Collect and analyze data
- Maintain and sterilize equipment
- Take inventory of supplies
- Assist in writing reports
- Preclinical animal model creation
- Dose administration
- Animal behavioral testing
- Participate, as needed, in broader experiments and projects
- Write, interpret and edit animal protocols

Position Requirements

- Degree in Veterinary Technology, Animal Science or related field
- At least 2 years of preclinical animal experience
- Must have experience with rodents, canines, and other animal models
- Experience with aseptic surgery, necropsy and tissue collection
- Experience with drug administration; able to work with controlled substances
- Analytical skills to conduct experiments and analysis with precision and accuracy
- Strong communication skills are required.
- Critical thinking and problem solving
- Experience with Word, Excel and other common office software